Because the tails were a gift from her father, she is very fond of them, and she is often seen eating food or playing with them. Her mother works as an assistant professor in the department of intelligent life. Her mother is obsessed with world-building, and she has a pet dog named Babulu, who is also a child. One day, Makuru finds an old ring while out by the river. She wears it, and her tails become normal. Her parents are shocked when they find her in the river, while she claims that she was walking on the cliff. Her parents do not believe her story, but her grandmother does. On the train back to school, she catches the tail of her tail, which she does not want to, and it transforms into a tail with a human face. Because of her tail, Makuru feels that something is out of place within herself. Its aim is to make Scotland one of the first countries in the world to offer a statutory right to Mental Health and Support in pregnancy, childbirth and parenting. The campaign was launched in August 2012 by the Scottish Government to respond to the findings of a review commissioned by the Scottish Government on women’s health and wellbeing and mental health. The review had concluded that in Scotland ‘there is a need to provide a statutory right to a package of support related to the pre-conception, conception, birth and parenting phases of women’s lives’. The campaign aims to empower mums around Scotland to take charge of their own health and wellbeing, leading to better outcomes for themselves and their families. Events are being organised, involving mums, midwives and healthcare professionals. All of the awareness raising has been supported by Scottish Government ministers, MSPs, and women who have shared their experiences of mental health, as well as those who have provided their support. Nina Bedford, Community Development and Carer for Scotland and Scottish Women's Lobby says: "The campaign is well underway and this has been primarily due to the interest and involvement of women themselves. They are showing the power of having a voice and having the confidence to start to make positive changes for themselves and their children, but also for the whole country. "Women have been involved in all aspects of the campaign and have expressed their feedback, which has been used to shape the content of events, training and development that is happening.
