Efficacy and safety of tofacitinib in patients with moderate to severe active RA: results of a 52-week, randomised, double-blind, placebo-controlled, phase 3 study. Blockade of Janus kinase (JAK) signalling can ameliorate disease activity in animal models of rheumatoid arthritis (RA) and in patients with RA. Tofacitinib, a JAK inhibitor, showed rapid, dose-related efficacy and high retention in patients with RA in earlier phase 2 studies. We aimed to assess the efficacy and safety of tofacitinib in patients with moderate to severe active RA. In this double-blind, multicentre, phase 3 study, patients with moderate to severe RA were randomly assigned (3:2) to receive tofacitinib 10 mg twice daily or matching placebo (three patients per group), by oral mouth, for 52 weeks. The primary endpoint was the proportion of patients achieving the American College of Rheumatology 20% (ACR20) response at week 12, analysed on an intention-to-treat basis. Analysis of ACR20 response, percentage of patients with ACR50 and ACR70 responses, and modified versions of the Disease Activity Score and simplified disease activity index (DAS28, including C-reactive protein [CRP] and simple-DAS28) as secondary endpoints were done in the intent-to-treat populations. Safety endpoints included incidence of adverse events, serious adverse events, and deaths. The study is registered on ClinicalTrials.gov, number NCT01458580. Between Sept 30, 2012, and Feb 28, 2014, 514 patients were enrolled and randomised to tofacitinib (n=304) or placebo (n=210). The 52-week tofacitinib- and placebo-treated groups comprised 270 (86%) and 103 (49%) patients, respectively. At week 12, ACR20 response was achieved by 66.2% (95% CI 59.1-72.4) of patients in the tofacitinib group and 35.7% (27.6-44.8) of patients in the placebo group (p
